REUTERS-NABJ FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM

The Reuters-NABJ program offers nine months of hands on, real-world experience with competitive pay in a Reuters bureau. This fellowship, open to members of the National Association of Black Journalists, is part of the Reuters Editorial Trainee Program, during which participants will gain a deep grounding in financial and/or general news reporting, work on fast-paced news stories and develop skills in enterprise journalism.

The program seeks rising reporters, recent graduates or business professionals who can demonstrate a clear commitment to a career in journalism and an ability to generate story ideas relevant for a Reuters audience. We are looking for journalists capable of telling stories in a multimedia context, using text, video and/or graphics. Interest in or experience covering business news is a major plus!

Participants will start with intensive classroom training and then work on reporting teams. They will be mentored by some of our finest journalists as they hit the ground running, delivering stories that uphold the Thomson Reuters Trust Principles of independence, integrity and freedom from bias.

CORE REQUIREMENTS INCLUDE:

- Member of NABJ
- A clear commitment to a career in journalism
- The drive to build sources, break news and deliver deeply reported stories
- Ability to generate original, relevant story ideas
- Interest in financial/business news
- Fluency in written English
- A strong interest in issues that affect companies, markets and economies
- An international outlook
- An ability to work on a team

OTHER USEFUL SKILLS OR EXPERIENCE:

- Knowledge of a relevant field such as banking, financial markets, accounting, law or computer science
- Up to 3 years of journalism experience
- Expertise in data analysis or data-driven journalism
- Experience in multimedia storytelling
- Fluency in another language such as Spanish, Arabic, Mandarin or Russian
- Skills in investigative reporting

“As a Reuters-NABJ Fellow, I strengthened my breaking news, multimedia and data reporting skills. I also discovered a deeper passion for business reporting and generated feature story ideas that took me throughout the Midwest. The wealth of knowledge and outpouring of support by Reuters global staff enabled me to seamlessly transition into my post-fellowship reporting job in New York City.”
