CEO Letter: Standing Still Is Not an Option

In my first year as president and CEO of Thomson Reuters, it is my pleasure to share our Social Impact results from 2019.

Strengthening Societies

Our business strengthens the foundations of societies worldwide – providing information, expertise and insight that people can trust. That's why, when the seams that keep society together are at risk of fraying, we are redoubling the focus of our social impact work on driving access to justice and transparency, ideas that our customers fight for daily.

Many people know us for Reuters - the world's most global and most trusted news organization. In a world of collapsing trust, fast, accurate, unbiased journalism is vital. We thank our journalists for their service just as we thank frontline workers for all they are doing during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Our journalism informs and empowers people around the world and serves to fight the growing specter of misinformation. That principle is just as true for our legal, tax, government and print businesses, which help to create the backbone of legal and tax systems, supporting fair outcomes and providing greater transparency into global supply chains. This all strengthens ideas and institutions that help societies function.

The resilience of our planet is no less important. In 2019, we achieved full carbon neutrality while engaging thousands of our employees in sustainability efforts around the globe. This year, we choose not to stand still. We will source renewable energy for 100% of our global energy needs and have set science-based carbon reduction targets, aligning with the 1.5 degree pathway.

Our People First

The greatest strength of our company is our people. Diverse and inclusive workforces drive innovation and connect communities. In 2019, Thomson Reuters achieved 100% on the Human Rights Campaign Foundation's Corporate Equality Index for the 8th year in a row. We are grateful for the recognition, but the work does not stop there. Volunteerism continues to be a hallmark of our employee culture. Our people showed huge passion for their communities, investing over 116,000 volunteer hours this past year.

I must also commend the work of the Thomson Reuters Foundation, an independent nonprofit focused on media freedom, inclusive economies and human rights. Its work continues to inspire and change lives.

Whether you work for Thomson Reuters, know us as a partner or you're thinking of joining us, we thank you for reading this short report, which reflects the work of many thousands of people worldwide.

SOCIAL IMPACT REPORT 2019

Access to Justice and Transparency Are at the Heart of Everything We Do

We work to create the necessary foundations for access to justice and transparency in everything we do. We partner with our employees, customers and communities to create opportunities for innovation, community impact and sustainable corporate citizenship.

In 2019, we launched a suite of innovative programs for our employees, the Thomson Reuters Foundation and our partners. We examined the legal sector's capacities and duties in promoting peace, justice and strong institutions while bringing our customers and partners to the table with the United Nations Global Compact and the Thomson Reuters Foundation TrustLaw group. We also brought media literacy and press freedom front and center through partnerships with the National Association for Media Literacy Educators and the Reporter's Committee for Freedom of the Press, which built on the strong work of the Reuters news team in stemming the flow of misinformation worldwide through accurate, objective journalism and fact-checking. Lastly, we continue to partner with our customers, employees and product teams to examine how we can continue to strengthen the foundations of justice and transparency through our knowledge, skills and expertise.

PROVIDING A SAFE PASSAGE

With over 1,000 legal professionals employed at Thomson Reuters, we are uniquely positioned to impact our local and global communities through pro bono work. In 2019, our NYC team partnered with the Safe Passage Project, which provides free legal services to immigrant and refugee children. Our team worked with a Guatemalan child who was detained after escaping a dangerous life in her home country. The team secured her status as a Special Immigrant Juvenile and she now attends high school with friends and has a safe place to live. This is one of many examples of our long-standing commitment to supporting our communities through pro bono efforts - it is part of our culture and who we are as lawyers and people.

PROMOTING PEACE, JUSTICE AND STRONG INSTITUTIONS

In September 2019, we partnered with the United Nations Global Compact (UNGC) and our Foundation's TrustLaw team to host an interactive workshop with experts across the legal community supporting efforts to integrate Sustainable Development Goal (SDG) 16 – Peace, Justice, and Strong Institutions, into corporate DNA. Our focus was on pro bono efforts aimed at ending abuse, exploitation and trafficking, and ensuring access to information and freedom of the press. The result was progress in the research being done at the UNGC and the development of multiple ongoing projects for TrustLaw and nonprofit partners promoting further legal research.

COMBATING MISINFORMATION

We work each day to inform and empower people around the world, identifying key areas of opportunity to combat misinformation and help protect the rights of our journalists. In 2019 we partnered with the National Association of Media Literacy (NAMLE) to celebrate Media Literacy weeks in both Canada and the United States. These events brought journalists, educators and students together to discuss the changing news landscape and the critical skills needed to decipher fact from opinion. We are proud to support the next generation in developing their capacities to become civically engaged and media savvy as part of our support of journalism's sustainable future.
